INTRODUCTION

By this civil enforcement action the California Fair Political Practices Commission (FPPC) seeks monetary penalties and injunctive relief under the Political Reform Act of 1974 (the Act), Government Code sections 81000 et seq., for past violations of the Act. The parties have stipulated that the defendant's motion to quash is deemed a response to the Second Amended Complaint and that this court's order shall be deemed an adjudication as to the Second Amended Complaint.

Under the Act, the defendant tribe is a "person" subject to regulation by the Act. The FPPC's duty to ensure the defendant tribe's compliance is no different from its duty to ensure compliance of all who engage in regulated transactions.

This is a case of first impression in California, although other states have enforced their campaign contribution laws against Indian tribes. The United States Supreme Court has not considered any case presenting the question whether the states have authority to enforce against Indian tribes laws protecting the integrity of state elections and legislative processes.

No case has determined that tribes have authority to interfere with impunity in states' rights of self-government, either as a matter of federal common law or by virtue of any federal statute. No case has held that tribes participate in state elections and legislative processes on a basis different from any other citizen or association.

The only cases curtailing state court civil jurisdiction over tribes for off-reservation conduct – Kiowa and Redding Rancheria – considered tribal transactions with private individuals. In each case tribal courts provided an alternate forum with jurisdiction to resolve the dispute. Neither case held or suggested that such immunity from suit, based on federal common law and statutes, would or could extend to tribal participation in state elections and legislative processes, power over which is reserved to the states by Article IV, § 4 of the United States Constitution through the 10th Amendment.

1 The states' interest in protecting the integrity of their state governments lies at 2 the heart of representative government and is essential to independence of the states.
3 The United States Supreme Court has held that congressional intent to interfere with 4 these interests will not be inferred but must be "unmistakably clear." The tribe can show 5 no such congressional intent and has cited no precedent holding or suggesting that tribes 6 are free from enforcement of regulations protecting those interests and applicable 7 equally to all who make contributions to influence State voters and elected officials.

8 Although other California tribes comply with the Act, the defendant tribe has not.
9 The FPPC has no choice but to comply with the statutory mandate that it enforce the Act 10 vigorously for the benefit of all of its citizens, including defendant's members. Cal.
11 Const. Article III, section 3.5.

12 STATEMENT OF FACTS

13 The second amended complaint alleges that the defendant tribe, according to its 14 own records, made contributions of more than one million dollars to California political 15 candidates and committees from January 1, 1998 to June 30, 1998, making it a major 16 donor committee under the Act (§ 10). In the 1998 calendar year the tribe made 17 contributions of more than $7,500,000 to statewide ballot initiatives (§ 11). It 18 contributed to more than 140 candidates for elective state office (§ 11). From July 1, 19 1998 to December 31, 1998 the tribe made contributions totaling at least $6 million 20 (§ 21). The tribe made similar contributions in 2001 (§ 12) and 2002 (§ 13).

21 Notwithstanding its status as a major donor committee, the tribe failed to file full 22 and timely disclosure reports required by the Act, thereby depriving voters of 23 information necessary to make informed decisions. It did not file its report for the 24 period January 1, 1998 to June 30, 1998 until October 2000, more than two years after 25 the due date (§ 19). The tribe filed an untimely report for the period July 1, 1998 26 through December 31, 1998 in March 1999 but only filed an amended final statement in 27 November 2000, nearly two years after the due date (§ 22).

1 More recently, in connection with the Proposition 51 ballot initiative, the tribe 2 failed to disclose a contribution of $125,000 to the Yes on Proposition 51 Committee, 3 using the Planning and Conservation League as an intermediary. If it had passed, 4 Proposition 51 would have committed the expenditure of $15 million in public funds
5 per fiscal year, for 8 years, for a rail line from Los Angeles to Palm Springs, including a 6 train terminal at the tribe's Coachella Valley casino. (¶¶ 26-29).

7 In 1998 the tribe was one of the top 5 contributors to Yes on Proposition 5, 8 Californians for Indian Self-Reliance, contributing more than $2,300,000 to the most 9 expensive initiative campaign to that point in California history (¶ 37). The tribe entirely 10 failed to disclose or only made untimely reports of several last-minute in-kind 11 contributions to Yes on Proposition 5 totaling some $1 million (¶¶ 37-61). The 12 complaint details additional undisclosed or late disclosures of contributions in the 13 November 1998 general election, the March 2001 special election, the November 2001 14 general election, and the March 5, 2002 primary election to, respectively, Carl 15 Washington for Assembly, the California State Democratic Central Committee, 16 California Voter Registration 2002, the California Empowerment Project, and the 17 California Republican Party (¶¶ 62-84).

18 The tribe's quarterly lobbyist employer reports, required by the Act, failed to 19 identify the bills that were the subject of the tribe's lobbying efforts for any quarter of 20 2001 (¶¶ 85-98).

21 The Declarations of Alan Herndon, Chief Investigator for the Enforcement 22 Division of the FPPC and Dan Schek, Investigator III of the FPPC, support finding that 23 the tribe intends to influence California voters beyond its reservation borders on issues 24 affecting all Californians. The exhibits attached to these declarations detail 25 contributions exceeding ten million dollars to statewide propositions, political parties 26 and state and local candidates (Herndon Dec. ¶ 10), including large contributions to 27 approximately 90% of all incumbant legislators. (Schek Dec. ¶ 8, Ex. A). In 2001/2002 28 alone the tribe paid in excess of $250,000 to firms for the purposes

1 of lobbying. (Declaration of Mark Krausse ¶ 11). These declarations also show that it is 2 not possible to know the true extent of such contributions or activity, unless the tribe
3 complies with the Act's disclosure requirements. Nor can the FPPC accurately audit 4 recipients' compliance. Certainly voters cannot make informed decisions, when reports 5 are untimely or incomplete.

6 The Declarations of Karen Getman, Chairman of the FPPC; Bill Jones, Secretary 7 of State; Bob Stern, former FPPC General Counsel and President of the Center for 8 Governmental Studies; and Jim Knox, Executive Director of Common Cause and the 9 attached exhibits support finding that California has a significant interest in protecting 10 the integrity of its elections and legislative processes from the corrupting influence of 11 significant campaign contributions and lobbying activities by special interests.

12 The declarations by officials from the states of Wisconsin (George Dunst, Legal 13 Counsel for the Wisconsin State Elections Board), Connecticut (Jeffrey Garfield, 14 Executive Director and General Counsel of the Connecticut Elections Enforcement 15 Commission and Alan Plofsky, Executive Director and General Counsel of the 16 Connecticut State Ethics Commission), and Minnesota (Jeanne Olson, Executive 17 Director of the Minnesota Campaign Finance and Public Disclosure Board) show that 18 there is no tradition of tribal immunity with respect to enforcement of laws analogous 19 to the Act and that other states successfully enforce their laws, including in state court.
20

21 SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

22 Put simply, the tribe cannot be fully eligible to participate in State elections and 23 legislative activities and at the same time be immune from enforcement of State laws 24 protecting the integrity of the very elections in which the tribe and its members may 25 participate as voters, candidates, office holders, and lobbyist employers. The defendant 26 tribe and its members, as full participants in the government they share 27

1 with all other citizens of California, are subject to the rules protecting all citizens from 2 undue influence of money and from improper and corrupt practices.

3 The principles of Indian law protecting tribal rights of self-government do not 4 apply here. Nor has the United States Supreme Court established "an inflexible per se 5 rule precluding state jurisdiction over tribes and tribal members in the absence of 6 express congressional consent." California v. Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, 480
7 U.S. 202, 214-15 (1987). The courts have analyzed tribal claims of immunity from suit 8 as a question of subject matter jurisdiction, not personal jurisdiction, and will go beyond 9 the allegations of the complaint to consider evidence. Since the determination of 10 sovereign immunity is made on a case-by-case basis, a finding of immunity in an 11 unrelated action cannot collaterally estop the court from determining its jurisdiction 12 over this enforcement action.

13 In ruling on defendant's motion to quash, the court should make the following 14 determinations:

- 15 • The Act, by its terms, applies to the defendant.
- 16 • The tribe is not immune from regulation.
- 17 • The State's power to regulate includes the power to enforce.

18 The first determination is a pure question of state law. The second two raise questions 19 of Indian law, which require analysis of federal, as well as state, precedent. In this case 20 the latter two determinations also implicate 10th Amendment powers reserved to the 21 States in a manner not addressed by any existing federal decision. The few state 22 decisions find subject matter jurisdiction over tribes and tribal political committees.

23 To show that the state has power to regulate the tribal conduct at issue, this 24 opposition cites authorities and offers supporting evidence to show:

- 25 (1) the subject matter of the Act deals with an area devoid of traditional tribal 26 authority and affects no tribal sovereign interest;
- 27 (2) Congress has not preempted state authority in this area; and

1 (3) the 10th Amendment limits federal interference with sovereign state 2 interests in protecting the integrity of state elections and legislative processes.

3 To show that the State's power to regulate includes the power to enforce the Act 4 by state court action against the tribe, this opposition cites authorities and offers 5 supporting evidence to show:

6 (1) neither Kiowa nor Redding Rancheria (nor any other precedent cited by 7 defendants) is dispositive of the motion to quash;

8 (2) the State's sovereign interests cannot be protected without the ability to 9 enforce the Act against the tribe on the same basis as it is enforced against all others 10 whose conduct is subject to regulation by the Act, a power reserved to the State by the 11 10th Amendment.

12 I. DESPITE DEFENDANT'S UNIQUE STATUS, IT IS SUBJECT TO 13 REGULATION OF ITS OFF-RESERVATION CONDUCT AFFECTING 14 STATE GOVERNMENTAL PROCESSES

15 The FPPC does not dispute that the defendant tribe is a federally-recognized 16 Indian tribe (Agua MPA p. 3) and that, as such, the defendant enjoys unique status in the 17 state/federal system as a "domestic dependent nation." (Agua MPA pp. 2-3). See 18 Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 30 U.S. (5 Pet.) 1, 16 (1831). The FPPC agrees that the 19 defendant, by virtue of its unique status, has rights of tribal self-government assiduously 20 protected by Congress. This case in no way implicates those rights nor threatens that 21 unique status.

22 Tribes are not parties to the United States Constitution and are not states within 23 the meaning of the Constitution. See e.g. Cotton Petroleum Corp. v. New Mexico, 490 24 U.S. 163, 191-92 (1989). It is equally clear that "Indian reservations do not partake of 25 the full territorial sovereignty of States or foreign countries." Washington v.
26 Confederated Tribes of Colville Indian Reserve, 447 U.S. 134, 165 n. 1 (1980) 27 (Brennan, J. concurring in part and dissenting in part). Indian tribes are "prohibited from 28 exercising . . . powers 'inconsistent with their status.'" Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribes, 435 U.S. 191, 208 (1978).

1 Tribal sovereignty is of a "unique and limited character[] [and] exists only at the 2 sufferance of Congress and is subject to complete defeasance." United States v.
3 Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 323 (1978). Congress' exercise of that power limits the reach 4 of state authority, in order to protect the right of tribes to make their own laws and to be 5 ruled by them. See White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 448 U.S. 136, 142
6 (1980) (quoting from Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217, 220 (1959)).

7 On the other hand, it is well-settled that off-reservation conduct of tribes, absent 8 a Congressional directive limiting state authority, falls within the regulatory reach of 9 states. See Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Jones, 411 U.S. 145, 148 (1973); see also, 10 Boisclair v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1158 (1990) (if primary situs of acts is 11 outside Indian territorial boundaries, tribal defendants have acted beyond their sovereign 12 authority and are not protected by sovereign immunity).

13 The tribe's unsupportable assertion of unique authority to inject its influence into 14 State government and elections without regard to state regulation implicates the 15 sovereign interest of the State of California and its citizens, including the tribe's 16 members, to protect the integrity of their elections and legislative processes. Neither 17 the courts nor Congress have stripped the states of the power to protect their citizens 18 from the corrupting influence of undisclosed contributions and lobbying by anyone, 19 including Indian tribes. This court's failure to exercise jurisdiction would have the 20 unwarranted effect of granting defendant unique power over California's political 21 processes, a result precluded by the 10th Amendment.

22 II. THE MOTION TO QUASH NECESSARILY RAISES THE QUESTION OF 23 SUBJECT MATTER, AS OPPOSED TO PERSONAL JURISDICTION

24 Defendant asserts that its motion raises the issue of personal jurisdiction and 25 reserves the question of subject matter jurisdiction. (Agua MPA pp. 4, 13 n. 4). The 26 FPPC agrees that the defendant may raise the question of its immunity from suit by a 27 motion to quash or dismiss. However, the courts have analyzed the question of tribal 28 immunity from suit as necessarily raising the question of subject matter

1 jurisdiction. See Great Western Casinos, Inc. v. Morongo Band of Mission Indians, 2 74 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1417-18 (1999), cert. denied 531 U.S. 812 (2000); see also,
3 Boisclair v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 3d at 1144, n. 1; Middletown Rancheria of Pomo
4 Indians v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd., 60 Cal. App. 4th 1340, 1356 (1998); Inland 5 Casino Corp. v. Superior Court, 8 Cal. App. 4th 770, 778 (1992).

6 Assuming sovereign immunity relates to the state court's subject matter rather 7 than personal jurisdiction, it does not follow that the court is limited simply to analysis
8 of the allegations of the complaint, as if defendant had demurred. Western Casinos, 74
9 Cal. App. 4th at 1417; see also Boisclair v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 3d at 1158-59 10 (determination of the sovereign immunity issue required elaboration of facts underlying 11 allegations of the complaint; no immunity for off-reservation acts beyond the scope of 12 tribal authority); Warburton/Butner v. Superior Court, _____ Cal.App. 4th ____ 2002 13 WL 31656098 (filed 11/26/02, Fourth Appellate District) (issuing mandate directing 14 trial court to allow discovery on issue of subject matter jurisdiction).

15 This memorandum demonstrates that the court has subject matter jurisdiction 16 over this dispute and should deny the motion to quash.

17 III. THE ACT, BY ITS TERMS, APPLIES TO THE TRIBE

18 By its terms the Act applies to tribes, as well as to all other "persons," including 19 sovereigns. The Act defines "person" broadly as "an individual, proprietorship, firm, 20 partnership, joint venture, syndicate, business trust, company, corporation, limited 21 liability company, association, committee, and any other organization or group of 22 persons acting in concert." Gov't Code § 82047. At a minimum, a tribe is a group of 23 persons acting in concert.

24 The most closely analogous appellate decision held that even the California 25 Legislature is a "person" under the Act. Fair Political Practices Commission v. Suitt, 90 26 Cal. App. 3d 125 (1979). The court reasoned: "The act undeniably was intended to deal 27 comprehensively with the influence of money, all money, on 28

1 electoral and governmental processes." Id. at 132. The Legislature complained that 2 treating it as a person under the Act would infringe on its sovereign activities. The court
3 rejected the Legislature's contention, finding no sovereign interest in unscrutinized 4 campaign contributions:

6 [W]e do not see how bringing the glare of sunshine into the legislative process 7 infringes on any legitimate sovereign interest.

8 Id. at 133. The same reasoning requires this court to find that the defendant is a "person" 9 under the Act (defendant does not contend otherwise) and defendant has no sovereign 10 interest in secret contributions to California candidates and ballot measures or secret 11 payments for undisclosed lobbying activities.

12 In response to the argument that the Act was intended to apply only to 13 contributions by private entities, the court held:

14
15 But a very obvious reason for the absence of discussion of public campaign 16 contributions is not that the act intended such to remain secret and undisclosed, but 17 that contributions by governmental entities to political campaigns are per se 18 illegal. . . . Hence the need to specify such a proscription in the Act would have 19 been deemed unnecessary . . .

20 Id. at 131-32. Contrary to the suggestion of the tribe (Agua MPA p. 2), the contributions 21 of other state and local governments, whether lawful or unlawful, would also be subject 22 to regulation by the Act under Suitt.

23 If the tribe were a foreign nation for purposes of the Act, as the tribe also 24 suggests (Agua MPA p. 3), it would be barred altogether from making campaign 25 contributions by the Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA). 2 U.S.C. § 441e. "Foreign 26 nationals" include individuals, partnerships, associations, corporations, organizations, or 27 any other combination of individuals. 2 U.S.C. § 611 (a). The FECA proscription applies 28 to federal, state and local elections (U.S. v. Kanchanalak,

1 192 F. 3d 1037, 1047 (D.C. Cir. 1999)) and is incorporated into the Act by Government 2 Code section 85320.

3 It follows that, under Suitt, the defendant tribe is subject to regulation by the Act, 4 notwithstanding its sovereign attributes.

6 IV. THE TRIBE IS NOT IMMUNE FROM REGULATION OF ITS ACTIVITIES
AS A CAMPAIGN DONOR AND LOBBYIST EMPLOYER

7 A. The Act Implicates No Area Of Traditional Tribal Authority

8 Obviously, there is no tradition of sovereignty or sovereign immunity with 9 respect to tribal or tribe member involvement in state elections or legislative processes.
10 Defendant does not contend otherwise.

11 The history of Indian involvement in California state government, to the extent 12 that it informs the "backdrop" of tradition, is not one of which Americans generally, or 13 Californians in particular, can be proud. Although the issue was debated at the California 14 Constitutional Convention, the majority agreed only to permit the Legislature to adopt 15 statutes enabling Indian suffrage by a two-thirds vote, in "special cases." Cal. Const. of 16 1850, Art. II, § 1. The Legislature never passed the enabling legislation. Even after 17 adoption of the 15th Amendment to the United States Constitution, Indians who had not 18 severed tribal ties had no right to vote and did not become citizens until the General 19 Allotment Act of 1924. 43 Stat. 253 (codified at 8 U.S.C. § 1401 (b)).

20 This grant of full citizenship in 1924 was not envisioned in the era in which 21 tribal sovereign immunity first described neat, non-intersecting spheres of 22 federal/Indian and state jurisdiction. Nor was the current level of tribal political 23 influence envisioned in 1924. As shown by the Declaration of Common Cause 24 Executive Director Jim Knox, by the 1990's tribes and tribal members had become 25 active both in voter-initiated and legislative lawmaking. The report attached to the 26 Knox declaration and the Declaration of Dan Schek and attached exhibits show that 27 the defendant tribe is a large and pervasive donor to state campaigns and initiatives, 28

1 including such initiatives as Proposition 34, which substantially reformed the Act, and 2 Proposition 45, the term limits initiative, both of which fundamentally changed 3 California governmental processes.

4 This evidence demonstrates the tribe's intent to affect voters and legislators 5 beyond their reservation borders and to affect public policy beyond tribal interests per 6 se. All of this activity is regulated by the Act. The only burden imposed on the tribe is 7 the same burden imposed without discrimination on all other campaign donors and 8 lobbyist employers.

9 To paraphrase FPPC v. Suitt, bringing the glare of sunshine into the processes by 10 which the tribe seeks to influence State government infringes on no legitimate 11 sovereign interest of the tribe. Tribes and tribe members are welcome to participate in 12 State government according to the same rules and constraints on improper activities 13 applicable to any other person governed by the Act. The Declarations of George Dunst 14 (Wisconsin), Alan Plofsky and Jeffrey Garfield (Connecticut) and Jeanne Olson 15 (Minnesota) show, however, that tribes enjoy no tradition of sovereign authority in this 16 arena to support their unilateral undermining of the statutes protecting the integrity of 17 state government.

18 19 B. California Has Substantial Sovereign Interests In The Integrity Of Its Government Reserved by the Tenth Amendment

20 The Act seeks to ensure that State and local government "serve the needs 21 and respond to the wishes of all citizens equally, without regard to their wealth." 22 Gov't Code § 81001(a). The Act finds, among other things, that lobbyists and 23 organizations that make large contributions to campaigns "gain disproportionate 24 influence over governmental decisions" (§ 81001(c)), that "existing laws for 25 disclosure of campaign receipts and expenditures have proved to be inadequate" (§ 26 81001(d)), and that "previous laws regulating political practices have suffered from 27 inadequate enforcement" (§ 81001(h)). Purposes of the Act include (1) fully 28 informing voters and inhibiting improper practices (§ 81002(a)) and providing adequate enforcement mechanisms to public officials and private citizens so that the Act will be "vigorously enforced" (§ 81002(f)).

The very arguments upon which the defendant relies support California's right and interest as a sovereign to protect and preserve its own right of self-government. However, the State's interests, unlike tribal interests in self-government, are reserved to the states by the United States Constitution Article IV, section 4 (guaranteeing every state a republican form of government), through the 10th Amendment.

Under the 10th Amendment the states retained "a residuary and inviolable sovereignty." See e.g. Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 918-19 (1997). The states' power to determine the qualifications of their government officials is a power "reserved to the States under the Tenth Amendment and guaranteed to them by that provision of the Constitution under which the United States 'guarantee[s] to every State in the Union a Republican Form of Government.'" Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452, 463 (1991).

In upholding a Missouri constitutional provision prescribing the mandatory retirement age for State judges, the Court in Gregory described the inherent sovereignty invoked by the FPPC in this action:

[I]t is a decision of the most fundamental sort for a sovereign entity. Through the structure of its government, and the character of those who exercise government authority, a State defines itself as a sovereign. "It is obviously essential to the independence of the States, and to their peace and tranquility, that their power to prescribe the qualifications of their own officers . . . should be exclusive, and free from external interference, except so far as plainly provided by the Constitution of the United States.

Id. at 460. Subject only to limits imposed by the United States Constitution, the Court held that such power "inheres in the State by virtue of its obligation . . . 'to preserve the basic conception of a political community.'" [citations omitted]. Id.

1 More recently Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC, 528 U.S. 377
2 (2000), held that Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), is authority for state limits on 3 contributions to state political candidates. The Court recognized the state's legitimate 4 and substantial "interests of preventing corruption and the appearance of it that flows 5 from munificent campaign contributions." 528 U.S. at 390. See also, e.g. Rosario v.
6 Rockefeller, 410 U.S. 752, 761 (1973) (citing additional cases) (clear that preservation 7 of the integrity of the electoral process is a legitimate and valid state goal); Libertarian 8 Party v. Eu, 28 Cal. 3d 535, 542 (1980) (state interest in preserving integrity of 9 elections is compelling).

10 The Declaration of Fair Political Practices Commission Chairman Karen Getman 11 shows that the FPPC has demonstrated California's substantial interests protected by the 12 campaign disclosure requirements of the Act as well as by those provisions requiring 13 disclosure of lobbying activities. The United States District Court for the Eastern 14 District of California made this finding in California ProLife Council, Inc. v. Karen
15 Getman et al., No. CIV S-00-1698 FCD GGH. (Getman Dec. Ex. D). The ProLife
16 Council's appeal is pending in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. To support the court's 17 finding of the Act's constitutionality, the FPPC produced evidence that voters can and do 18 change their voting behavior when they are informed of the identities of the supporters 19 or opponents of candidates or ballot measures. See Getman Dec. Ex. A and C 20 (Declarations of David Binder, principal in David Binder Research with exhibits) and Ex.
21 B (Declaration of Stephen Hopcraft, President and co-owner of Hopcraft 22 Communications). Additional evidence showed information gleaned from publicly filed 23 campaign finance disclosure reports is "absolutely critical" both to voters and the news 24 media, particularly in sorting through claims and counter-claims about ballot measures.

25 The ProLife Council court found that the Ninth Circuit and the United States 26 Supreme Court had recognized the State's interest in informing the electorate of 27 campaign expenditures and found further that the evidence demonstrated the 28

1 interest is "particularly strong in California." By separate request for judicial notice the 2 FPPC has requested that this court take judicial notice of the court's finding and of the 3 evidence supporting the finding. See also, Griset v. Fair Political Practices Com'n, 8 4 Cal. 4th 851, 852 (1994) (recognizing state interest in assuring that the electorate has 5 information regarding the source of political campaign funds).

6 Similarly, in Institute of Governmental Advocates v. Fair Political Practices
7 Com'n, 164 F. Supp. 2d 1183, 1194-95 (E.D. Cal. 2001), the federal district court 8 recognized that the state's legitimate interest in preventing corruption or the appearance 9 of corruption of state elections, supported limitations on contributions by lobbyists.
10 (Getman Dec. Ex. E). Earlier the California Supreme Court had upheld the lobbyist 11 registration and reporting requirements of the Act. Fair Political Practices 12 Commission v. Superior Court, 25 Cal. 3d 33, 46-49 (1979). The court found that the 13 State had a "valid interest in determining the source of voices seeking to influence 14 legislation and could reasonably require the professional lobbyist to identify himself 15 and disclose his lobbying activities" as well as "disclosure of financial activities of 16 persons engaged in political processes." Id. at 47 (citing United States v. Harriss, 347
17 U.S. 612, 625-626 (1954) and Brown v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. 3d 509, 519-523 18 (1971)).

19 The Declaration of Secretary of State Bill Jones and attached exhibits show that 20 neutral, nonpartisan application of the Act's disclosure requirements is essential to 21 accomplishing the Act's purposes. Further, the democratic process is grossly 22 undermined when voters fail to receive full and timely information about contributions 23 by major donors. The high public interest is indicated by the Cal-Access web site's 24 receiving more than 500,000 "hits" in the months leading up to the March 2002 primary 25 election, giving public access to some 35,000 electronic filings.

26 As a matter of fact and of law, there can be no doubt of the State's great and 27 fundamental interest in protecting the integrity of its elections and legislative 28 processes, subject only to limitation by the United States Constitution. These

1 interests define the very essence of state sovereignty. In this arena Congress has not 2 attempted to limit state regulatory power over tribes and tribe members. Its attempt to 3 do so would be subject to challenge under the 10th Amendment.

5 C. No Federal Statute Prohibits Regulation of Tribal Campaign
6 Contributions Or Lobbying Activity

7 Most important for resolution of this motion, the Gregory Court held that "[I]f 8 Congress intends to alter the 'usual constitutional balance between the States and the 9 Federal Government,' it must make its intention to do so 'unmistakably clear in the 10 language of the statute.'[citations omitted]." Id. 501 U.S. at 460. No federal statute 11 expressly or by implication prohibits state regulation of Indian contributions to state 12 elections.

13 The Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) regulates tribal contributions to 14 federal elections and does not limit the authority of states to regulate tribal 15 contributions to state elections. Indian tribes are subject to contribution limitations 16 applicable to "persons," as defined by FECA ("an individual, partnership, committee, 17 association, corporation, labor organization, or any other organization or group of 18 persons" but not including the federal government). 2 U.S.C. § 431 (11). See FEC 19 Advisory Opinion, AO 2000-05 (May 15, 2000) (citing AO 1978-51, 1999-32, 1993-20 12). See generally U.S. v. Kanchanalak, 192 F. 3d 1037, 1043 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (FEC's 21 interpretation of the Act should be accorded considerable deference).

22 According to the recent Congressional Research Service Report to Congress, 23 under the recently enacted McCain Feingold Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 24 (P.L. 107-155; Mar. 27, 2002) (BCRA), Indian tribes, like other "persons" will be 25 subject to the new, increased contribution limits and will not be permitted to make soft 26 money donations to political parties.

27 Since no federal statute, including FECA and BCRA, expressly attempts to limit 28 State regulation in this area having no impact on tribal sovereign interests, the tribe's transactions are subject to regulation on the same basis as any other

1 "person" under the Act. See Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Jones, 411 U.S. at 148; see 2 also, Boisclair v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 3d at 1158.

3 V. THE COURT HAS JURISDICTION OVER THIS ENFORCEMENT ACTION

4 To date, the only court proceedings necessitated by tribal challenges to the 5 FPPC's jurisdiction have been those required by the actions of the defendant tribe and by 6 the Santa Rosa Indian Community of the Santa Rosa Rancheria (the defendant in Case 7 no. 02AS04544 pending in this court). Other tribes have complied with the Act.
8 Recently the Pachenga Band of Luiseno Indians submitted to the jurisdiction of the Act
9 and stipulated to a violation. (Getman Dec. Ex. F)

10 The FPPC acknowledges that state authority to regulate does not answer the 11 question whether an enforcement action may be brought against a tribe. See e.g.
12 Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe, 498 U.S. 505, 13 513 (1991). However, Kiowa Tribe v. Manufacturing Technologies, Inc., 523 U.S. 751
14 (1998), the only Supreme Court decision directly addressing tribal immunity from suit 15 for off-reservation conduct, says nothing about immunity from suit in connection with 16 tribal injection into a state's political processes. In this instance, the State's sovereign 17 interest in protecting the integrity of its elections necessarily includes the authority to 18 enforce the Act against all major donors and lobbyist employers, including defendant 19 Indian tribe.

20 The tribe should also acknowledge, as noted above, that the United States
21 Supreme Court has not established an inflexible per se rule precluding state jurisdiction 22 over tribes and tribal members in the absence of express congressional consent.
23 California v. Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, 480 U.S. at 214-15.

24 A. Kiowa Did Not Decide The Issue Presented To This Court

25
26 As stated at the outset, this is a case of first impression in California. No federal 27 case has addressed the issues raised by this motion to quash. Kiowa Tribe v.
28 Manufacturing Technologies, Inc., 523 U.S. 751 (1998) (Agua MPA pp. 13-14), is

1 the only United States Supreme Court decision directly addressing tribal immunity from 2 suit for off-reservation conduct. The three dissenting justices recognized Kiowa is the 3 first decision of the United States Supreme Court to state that the court-created 4 doctrine of sovereign immunity from lawsuits applies to off-reservation activities or 5 transactions. Justice Stevens' dissenting opinion states:

7 Despite the broad language used in prior cases, it is quite wrong for the 8 Court to suggest that it is merely following precedent, for we have simply 9 never considered whether a tribe is immune from a suit that has no 10 meaningful nexus to the tribe's land or its sovereign functions. Moreover, 11 none of our opinions has attempted to set forth any reasoned explanation 12 for a distinction between the States' power to regulate the off-reservation 13 conduct of Indian tribes and the States' power to adjudicate disputes arising 14 out of such off-reservation conduct.

15 Id. at 764. The dissenters cautioned that Court's judge-made law is unjust.

16 "Governments, like individuals, should pay their debts and should be held accountable 17 for their unlawful, injurious conduct." Id. at 765-66.

18 As broad as its holding is phrased, Kiowa says nothing about tribal immunity 19 from suit in connection with tribal participation in a state's political processes or 20 affecting sovereign interests reserved to the states by the 10th Amendment. Kiowa's 21 holding applies only to tribal transactions, whether governmental or commercial, 22 whether on- or off-reservation, between tribes and private individuals or entities. The 23 decision does not address tribal interactions with or injection directly into the affairs of 24 state governments. No case applying Kiowa, including Redding Rancheria, has so 25 extended its holding.

26 Kiowa extended court-created tribal immunity to "suits on contracts, whether 27 those contracts involve governmental or commercial activities and whether they 28 were made on or off a reservation." Id. at 760. Justice Kennedy pointed out that the doctrine developed as a matter of federal common law "almost by accident" (id. at 756)

1 and expressed doubt as to the wisdom of the doctrine but deferred to Congress to alter 2 the limits of the doctrine (id.).

3 More recently, Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353, 362 (2001), not only protected 4 the state of Nevada's ability to enforce its process on Indian lands but also disclaimed 5 any right of tribes either to arrest the operations of state government at their will or to 6 serve as havens for state law-breakers. The decision in Hicks supports the FPPC's view 7 that the Supreme Court has not yet spoken directly on tribal sovereign immunity from 8 suit where the claim of immunity relates to off-reservation activity interfering with the 9 state's reserved powers of self-government.

10 On December 2, 2002, the Court granted certiorari to review the 9th Circuit
11 decision that, seemingly contrary to Hicks, held that a county and its agents 12 violated a tribe's sovereign immunity when they obtained and executed a search 13 warrant against the tribe and tribal property related to an investigation of tribal 14 welfare fraud. Bishop Paiute Tribe v. County of Inyo, 291 F. 3d 549 (9th Cir. 2002), 15 certiorari granted by Inyo County v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of Bishop Community
16 of Bishop Colony, __ S.Ct. __, 2002 WL 1969308, 71 USLW 3163 (U.S. Dec 02, 17 2002) (NO. 02-281) (Agua MPA at p. 7). The grant of certiorari further supports the 18 FPPC's position that Kiowa does not limit state's rights to protect the integrity of state 19 government processes.

20 The defendant tribe's assertion of power in this case to make unregulated 21 contributions to California candidates, office holders and voter initiatives would 22 give it the right to arrest the operation of the Act at its will and to serve as a money 23 laundering haven for law-breakers. The Declaration of Bob Stern, the first General 24 Counsel of the FPPC and co-author of the Act, shows that the tribe could 25 completely undermine the Act, if it were not subject to enforcement of its 26 provisions.

1 No Supreme Court decision supports this exercise of unregulated, potentially 2 corrupting influence by any sovereign, group or Indian tribe over the elections and 3 legislative processes of state government.

5 B. Redding Rancheria Is Not Dispositive Of This Motion

6 Redding Rancheria v. Superior Court, 88 Cal. App. 4th 384 (2001) (Agua MPA 7 p. 14), followed Kiowa in a case involving off-reservation tortious conduct of 8 a tribal casino employee at a tribe-sponsored function. The court pointed out that 9 the tribe provided a mechanism to resolve civil suits by means of a hearing before 10 the tribal council, but that the plaintiff refused to follow that procedure. Also, the 11 plaintiff could sue individual tribal members in state court. The court found no 12 federal law granting California jurisdiction over alleged off-reservation Indian torts. Id.
13 at 387.

14 Notwithstanding the broad statements in Redding Rancheria, it relies in turn 15 on Kiowa, which, the FPPC has demonstrated, did not reach the issue raised by this 16 motion to quash. The FPPC relies on the California Supreme Court decision in 17 Boisclair and the above-cited decisions of the United States Supreme Court for the 18 proposition that the tribe cannot prevail in its motion absent a showing that 19 Congress expressly limited the State's rights, reserved by the 10th Amendment, to 20 protect the integrity of its elections by enforcing the Act. Absent a showing of a 21 tradition of tribal sovereignty in this arena, Congressional intent to interfere with 22 state sovereignty in the area of state elections, cannot be inferred, but must be 23 express. Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. at 460. Accordingly, Redding Rancheria is 24 not on point and is not dispositive of the motion.

25
26 C. The Power To Regulate Necessarily Includes The Power To Enforce Statutes Protecting Integrity of State Elections

27 Where tribes have no tradition of sovereignty and where state sovereign interests 28 are extraordinary, even in the absence of an express delegation to authority by Congress,

1 the courts have recognized that a necessary incident of the power to regulate is the 2 power to enforce. This general proposition has been recognized both as an aspect of 3 Indian and of state sovereignty.

4 Thus, for example, in Babbitt Ford, Inc. v. Navajo Indian Tribe, 710 F.2d 587 5 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied 466 U.S. 926 (1984), an Indian tribe was found to have 6 authority to exercise civil jurisdiction over non-Indians conducting vehicle 7 repossessions on reservation land. Because the regulations governing the conduct of 8 non-Indians were a legitimate exercise of the tribe's inherent powers, civil jurisdiction 9 to enforce the regulations was a "necessary exercise of tribal self-government." Id. at 10 598.

11 This same principle has been applied, even in the absence of express 12 Congressional authority, where states have authority to regulate tribal conduct. See Fort 13 Belknap Indian Community of Fort Belknap Indian Reservation v. Mazurek, 43 F.3d 14 428 (9th Cir. 1994), cert. denied 516 U.S. 806 (1995). Fort Belknap dealt with 15 regulation of liquor laws in Indian Country. Since there is no tradition of Indian 16 sovereignty in this arena, "little if any weight" would be accorded to asserted interests in 17 tribal sovereignty. Id. at 433. The court in Fort Belknap reasoned that, without the 18 power to prosecute violations, the state authority to regulate would be meaningless and 19 the state's high interest unprotected. Id. at 434.

20 The same reasoning applies to the "unusual subject" of inherent state authority to 21 govern and protect the integrity of its elections and legislative processes. Enforcement 22 of the Act would infringe no aspect of tribal self-government. There is no traditional 23 backdrop of sovereign authority and the state's interests could not be higher: the Article 24 IV, section 4 power, reserved to the states by the 10th Amendment, to supervise their 25 own elections, subject only to constitutional limitation, is the essence of state 26 sovereignty.

27 If California were without authority to enforce its regulations, the tribe could 28 corrupt state government with impunity, as shown by the Declaration of Bob Stern.

1 No precedent supports the result advocated by the tribe. Unlike the situations in Kiowa
2 and Redding Rancheria, involving tribal transactions with private 3 individuals or entities, where tribal courts exist as an alternative forum for dispute 4 resolution, there is no alternative forum and no remedy available, unless the Act is 5 enforced in state court. As in Fort Belknap, by necessity the right to regulate, in 6 this case involving the State's reserved powers of self-government, includes the 7 right to enforce in state court. Because of the 10th Amendment reserved powers of 8 the State, the lack of express Congressional authority, as in Fort Belknap, is not 9 dispositive.

10 D. "Courtesy" Compliance Is Not A Viable Alternative To Enforcement

11
12 Defendant's introduction suggests that the tribe provides alternative reports 13 that should be accepted in lieu of compliance with the Act. The tribe makes various 14 statements unsupported by evidence (Agua MPA at p. 1), with which the FPPC 15 does not agree. The evidence filed with this opposition shows that not all required donor 16 disclosures are available by combing through the reports of recipients.
17 Combing through recipient reports does not give a full or reliable picture of a 18 donor's activities and is costly and time-consuming. The defendant's last minute 19 contributions have not been disclosed timely and lobbying interests have not been either 20 fully or timely disclosed. And, obviously, sending the public searching the internet for 21 alternative "courtesy" postings by potential donors and lobbyist 22 employers does not equate with looking at a single, publicly mandated and 23 maintained site. Such postings by defendant tribe – which apparently began after 24 the FPPC filed this enforcement action – are entirely volitional and are not subject to 25 audit or confirmation.

26 The Declaration of Jim Knox shows that it is very difficult, expensive and time-27 consuming to try to derive the influence of any major donor by combing 28

1 through the reports of recipients. The Declaration of Mark Krausse, Executive Director 2 of the Fair Political Practices Commission, shows that it is difficult, if not 3 impossible, to track lobbying efforts without lobbyist employer reports.
4 Indeed, of the 37 measures the defendant lobbied in the most recent 5 legislative session, its position was listed in the bill analysis of 6 only one, SB 1828 (Burton) (§ 10).

7 The Declaration of Al Herndon shows that dual filing is essential to the FPPC's 8 ability to audit records for compliance by donors and recipients. (§ 5).

9 The Declaration of Bob Stern, President of the Center for Governmental Studies, 10 former general counsel of the FPPC and principal co-author of Proposition 9, which 11 enacted the Act, shows that basic tenets of the Act were that it should strengthen the 12 disclosure requirements (§ 5) and should apply to all contributors (§ 8). When, after 13 Buckley v. Valeo, the FPPC proposed a regulation to exempt certain minority 14 candidates (§ 9), the Legislature swiftly passed AB 453 prohibiting the FPPC from 15 exempting any person from the Act's requirements (§§ 10-11). Gov't Code § 84400.
16 Evidence supporting Stern's assertion that the Act is intended to apply to all contributors
17 includes the FPPC's amicus brief in Buckley v. Valeo (Ex. A), the Proposition 9 ballot 18 argument (Ex. B), the Legislative Counsel Digest to AB 453 (Ex. C), a Los Angeles
19 Times editorial ("Coverup for Contributions") (Ex. D), and the letter transmitting the bill 20 to Governor Brown requesting his signature (Ex. E).

21 The Declaration of Bob Stern shows that keys to the success of the Act have been 22 its requirements of full and timely disclosure with "double reporting" (§ 13) and 23 vigorous enforcement (§ 14). The tribe's conduct threatens to completely undermine the 24 Act. The tribe could fund independent expenditure campaigns without revealing the 25 source of funds. It could serve as a conduit for others who seek secretly to influence 26 state elections. (§§ 16, 17). It could make compliance auditing impossible.

27 ///

1 E. Other States Enforce Their Campaign Contribution Laws Against 2 Tribes And Have State Court Jurisdiction

3 Further demonstrating the lack of a basis for assertion of tribal sovereign 4 immunity, the evidence in support of this opposition shows that several states with 5 tribes operating large casinos enforce campaign contribution regulations against the 6 tribes participating in their state politics. The attached evidence is by way of example 7 only. More similar evidence could be adduced, if there were additional time. The FPPC 8 has located no state (or federal) decision that holds that state courts do not have 9 jurisdiction over comparable enforcement actions.

10 The Declaration of Jeanne Olson, Executive Director of the Minnesota Campaign 11 Finance and Public Disclosure Board, shows that only two tribes have refused to comply 12 with that state's disclosure and reporting laws. Both cases 13 required legal action and in both cases the Minnesota courts found that they had subject 14 matter jurisdiction. The declaration attaches copies of the two court 15 decisions.

16 In Minnesota State Ethical Practices Board v. Red Lake DFL Committee, 17 303 N.W. 2d 54 (Minn. Sup. Ct. 1981) (Olson Dec. Ex. A), the Minnesota Supreme 18 Court held that a tribal committee was subject to registration and disclosure laws, when 19 the committee paid for political advertisements disseminated outside the reservation 20 endorsing candidates for state and federal office. The trial court had 21 found subject matter jurisdiction and had held the committee in contempt. The 22 committee appealed and the supreme court affirmed. The court recognized the 23 special status of the Red Lake Band of Indians, that the federal government had not 24 transferred its exclusive jurisdiction to the state and that, consequently, the band 25 enjoyed unique rights of self-government. Id at 55. The court further noted that it 26 had recognized instances where the state lacked authority to govern the affairs of 27 band members within the reservation. Id. at 56.

28 The court rejected the defendant's argument that the state lacked jurisdiction to impose the requirements of its ethical practices act on the tribal committee. The 1 evidence showed that the committee intended to influence voters living outside the 2 reservation. Id. The court concluded that tribal activities calculated to influence 3 voters outside the reservation were a proper concern of the state and subject to its 4 reasonable regulation. It further found that the defendant committee had not 5 demonstrated that such regulation would have any adverse effect on tribal self-6 government. Id.

8 As plaintiff points out, the Red Lake Band participates in the election process, has 9 the same interest as other voters in the integrity of that process, and has a 10 corresponding obligation to comply with state laws which govern that process and 11 guard its integrity. Nor is the defendant Committee being asked to do any more than other organizations outside the state which are required to comply with Chapter 10A when they similarly seek to influence voters in the state.

12 Id.

13 In Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux (Dakota) Community v. Minnesota
14 Campaign Finance and Public Disclosure Board, 586 N.W.2d 406 (Minn. Ct. App.
15 1998) (Olson Dec. Ex. B), the tribe made a direct contribution to a political party 16 without making disclosures required of unregistered associations. The tribe sought 17 to enjoin the Board's order that it make disclosures required by the act. The court of 18 appeal upheld the lower court's denial of the requested injunction and specifically 19 rejected the contention that the Board did not have authority over the tribe. Id. at 20 412.

21 The Declaration of Jeffrey Garfield, Executive Director of the Connecticut
22 Elections Enforcement Commission, shows that the tribes operating gambling 23 casinos in that state have not contested the Commission's jurisdiction and have 24 fully complied with the state's disclosure laws. (¶¶ 5-7). The Declaration of Alan 25 Plofsky, Executive Director and General Counsel of the Connecticut State Ethics 26 Commission, shows that the same two tribes comply with the state's laws governing 27 lobbyist activities. (¶¶ 4-5). Further, the Mashantucket Pequot tribe and its Foxwood 28

1 Casino settled an enforcement action and paid civil penalties for violating the gift limits 2 and reporting requirements of the State Ethics Code. The tribe did not contest the state's 3 authority to enforce the Ethics Code. (§ 7, Ex C).

4 The Declaration of George Dunst, Legal Counsel for the Wisconsin Elections 5 Board, establishes that the states' politically active tribes comply with the state's 6 campaign finance disclosure laws. (§ 4). Recently the Oneida Nation Tribe paid a 7 forfeiture fine of $1,010 in connection with minor violations. (§ 5). Attached to the 8 Dunst Declaration are the Board's letters informing the tribe that it is a "committee" 9 under Wisconsin's law (Ex. A and B).

10 These states and the tribes whose members are citizens of these states recognize 11 that there is no tradition of tribal sovereign immunity with respect to involvement in 12 state elections, that disclosure laws are integral to the integrity of 13 state government, that the protected interests are shared by tribes with all other 14 state voters, and that there is no tribal sovereign interest in undermining laws 15 shedding light on contributions made to influence state elections and legislative 16 processes.

17 F. The Defendant's Remaining Authorities Are Inapposite

18 Other than Kiowa (and Redding Rancheria), the cases cited by defendant 19 tribe each relate to the question of state court jurisdiction over disputes having to 20 do with on-reservation activity implicating sovereign rights of self-government.

21 Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49 (1978) (Agua MPA p. 4) dealt 22 with tribal membership. Pan American Co. v. Sycuan Band of Mission Indians, 23 884 F. 2d 416, 418 (9th Cir. 1989) (Agua MPA p. 4), dealt with enforcement of a 24 bingo ordinance enacted by the tribe. McClendon v. U.S., 885 F. 2d 627, 629 (9th Cir.
25 1989) (Agua MPA p. 5), involved a dispute over a lease agreement, which, in turn, 26 related to a dispute over ownership of lands claimed on behalf of the tribe.

27 Chemehuevi Indian Tribe v. California State Bd. of Equalization, 474 U.S. 9 (1985) 28 (per curiam) (Agua MPA p. 5), dealt with on-reservation sales of cigarettes to non-

1 Indian purchasers. In each case the issue concerned traditional areas of tribal authority 2 and impacted rights of tribal self-government.

3 The decisions cited by the defendant on pages 5 and 6 also all involve on-4 reservation activities and each precedes Kiowa. Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Citizen
5 Band of Potawatomi Indian Tribe, 498 U.S. 505 (1991) (Agua MPA p. 5), involved a 6 valid state tax on on-reservation sales of cigarettes. Although the Court held that the 7 state's counterclaim was barred, it decided the merits. The Court analyzed federal 8 statutes relating to tax assessments on tribes and concluded:

10 Congress has consistently reiterated its approval of the immunity doctrine. See, 11 e.g., Indian Financing Act of 1974, 88 Stat. 77, 25 U.S.C. 1451 et seq., and the 12 Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, 88 Stat. 2203, 13 25 U.S.C. 450 et seq. These Acts reflect Congress' desire to promote the "goal 14 of Indian self-government, including its 'overriding goal' of encouraging tribal self-15 sufficiency and economic development." . . . Under these circumstances, we are 16 not disposed to modify the long-established principle of tribal sovereign 17 immunity.

18 Id. at 510 (emphasis added).

19 Justice Stevens' concurring opinion emphasized that the Court's holding rejected the 20 argument that the tribe was completely immune from legal process:

21 By addressing the substance of the tax commission's claim for prospective 22 injunctive relief against the Tribe, the Court today recognizes that a tribe's 23 sovereign immunity from actions seeking money damages does not necessarily 24 extend to actions seeking equitable relief.

25 Id. at 515-16.

26 California v. Quechan Indian Tribe, 595 F. 2d 1153 (9th Cir. 1979) (Agua 27 MPA p. 5), dealt with enforcement of fish and game laws on a reservation. Middletown 28 Rancheria of Pomo Indians v. Workers' Compensation Appeals Board, 60 Cal. App.
4th 1340 (1998) (Agua MPA p. 5), dealt with enforcement of workers

1 compensation laws against a tribal commercial entity (a casino) operated on a 2 reservation. Bishop Paiute Tribe v. County of Inyo (Agua MPA p. 7), as discussed
3 above, involved execution of a search warrant on reservation property. The United States 4 Supreme Court has granted certiorari and will, once again, examine the limits of tribal 5 sovereignty where the tribal assertion of sovereignty allows it to become a haven for 6 state lawbreakers (specifically, a welfare fraud ring).

7 None of these cases addressed off-reservation activities interfering with or 8 undermining powers of self-government reserved to the states through Article IV, 9 section 4 by the 10th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

10 VI. ISSUE PRECLUSION IS NOT DISPOSITIVE OF THIS MOTION

11 Defendant's reliance on the judgment of which it has requested that the court take 12 judicial notice is puzzling, since the judgment was reversed in full by a reported court of 13 appeal decision, which the defendant fails to cite: People ex rel. Lungren v. Community 14 Redevelopment Agency, 56 Cal. App. 4th 868 (1997). The attorney general appealed 15 from the judgment dismissing his complaint against the Community Redevelopment 16 Agency (Agency). The complaint challenged the actions of the Agency in entering into a 17 contract with the tribe under which the Agency would transfer real property owned or 18 acquired by it to the tribe and in exchange the tribe would give the Agency a share of the 19 gambling proceeds. The trial court found that the tribe was an indispensable party to the 20 action but could not be joined because of its sovereign immunity. On the Agency's 21 motion the court dismissed the complaint. The court of appeal concluded that the tribe 22 was not an indispensable party to the action and reversed. Id. at 870.

23 The judgment in Lungren has no bearing on resolution of the issues 24 presented by the tribe's motion to quash in this action. First, the tribe was not an 25 indispensable or even necessary party to the action. Second, the issue decided in the 26 prior action clearly was not identical. The court of appeal decision shows that the issue 27 – necessity of joining the tribe in an action challenging a state agency's 28

1 authority to contract with tribe – was entirely dissimilar to the issue presented in this 2 case.

3 Collateral estoppel or issue preclusion requires proof that the particular issue 4 was actually litigated and necessarily decided in the prior action. Rohrbasser v.
5 Lederer, 179 Cal. App. 3d 290, 297 (1986) (Agua MPA at p. 10) (denying collateral 6 estoppel effect where judgment debtor not given full opportunity to litigate issue in 7 prior action). This the tribe has not done. Also, California courts recognize a public 8 policy exception to issue preclusion that supports this litigation. See Kopp v. FPPC, 11 9 Cal. 4th 607, 621-22 (1995) (preclusion inoperative; when the issue is a question of law 10 rather than of fact, prior determination not conclusive if injustice would result or if the 11 public interest requires relitigation).

12 Most important, as these points and authorities have shown, the issue of state 13 jurisdiction over a tribe and its members is determined on a case-by-case basis. Each 14 case requires analysis of the pertinent interests of the state and the tribe. There is no per 15 se rule against exercise of state jurisdiction over tribes and tribe members. California 16 v. Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, 480 U.S. at 214-15. The tribe's citation to 17 Bishop Paiute Tribe v. County of Inyo, 291 F. 3d 549 (9th Cir. 2002) (Agua MPA p. 7) 18 suggests that, notwithstanding the statement in Cabazon, there is a per se rule when a 19 state asserts jurisdiction over a tribe, as opposed to individual members. As noted above, 20 the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari in Bishop Paiute on December 2, 21 2002.

22 The court should reject the contention that the issue presented by the motion 23 to quash has previously been determined or that, as a matter of law, a per se rule applies.
24 Unlike the plaintiff in Bishop Paiute, the FPPC has presented ample 25 evidence and authority to support state court jurisdiction over enforcement of State 26 laws regulating tribal campaign contributions to State elections and employment of 27 advocates lobbying State legislators. The FPPC has shown that no case has decided 28 whether a tribe is immune from state enforcement of its campaign contribution laws

1 or other laws protecting the state's sovereign interest in the integrity of its state 2 elections and legislative processes. At least one state, Minnesota, has found that, 3 though a tribe may be immune from other suits, it is not immune from enforcement of 4 a statute analogous to the Act.

5 VII. CONCLUSION

6 No precedent holds or suggests that the tribe may inject itself in the State's 7 election and legislative processes, except on the same basis as any other person or 8 association. This action implicates no tribal sovereign interest and Congress has not 9 preempted state authority in this area. Rather, the paramount interest here is that of 10 the State in protecting the integrity of its governmental processes - a fundamental 11 right of state sovereignty protected by Art. IV, sec. 4 through the 10th 12 Amendment. This court should deny defendant tribe's motion to quash.
